SMTP means Sender-Message-Tracking and is used to track the sender of e-mail. From an HTTP perspective, an e-mail message (or a piece of text, for that matter) is a request made to the SMTP server to send a message. If the SMTP server receives the request, it will usually check if it is from the desired recipient e-mail address and if so, it will pass the message along to the recipient for delivery. If not, it will send back an "error" message, such as: 550 Unrouteable mail from 192.168.1.1 In either case, the SMTP server would have recorded the information of the sender in a file that it stores in its e-mail system. This file, if you work on Linux, would be in a sub-directory named.mailcap, located at the root directory of the SMTP system. If you work on a Microsoft Windows platform, the.mailcap file will be located at %SystemDrive%\Applications\Microsoft\Outlook. A.mailcap file acts as a database, and contains information about the sender of each email received. For instance, it would have the "from" address of the sender and the "to" address of the recipient of the e-mail. It also contains information about the subject, the original
